“Are We Resurrected from the Dead When We Obey the Gospel?”

A thought question:

Paul wrote 1 Corinthians 15 to address the question of the resurrection of the dead.

There were those in Corinth who had a problem with that idea, and Paul sought to correct it. If the resurrection of the dead in this chapter is supposed to be the spiritual life that comes to a person at the new birth, explain why any Christian would have had an objection to that?

One could see, however, how some Gentile minds would be disturbed about the resurrection of the body. Being dead spiritually is a consequence of sin.

Physical death is also a consequence of sin (Rom. 5:12). The death of Christ atones for sin, therefore, it remedies the consequences of sin for those who obey him.

That means we can have the forgiveness of our sins; our souls can be made alive to God. It also means that he will redeem our bodies from physical death, which is also a consequence of sin.

And so, Christians are now alive in spirit, and they wait for the redemption of their bodies in the resurrection (Rom. 8:11,23).

The resurrection is not simply some peripheral New Testament teaching. It involves the final act of God’s salvation plan — the victory over the last enemy (1 Cor. 15:54-58).
